Conversations with Presidents from SDASFAA and KASFAA

Kansas

- Haskill is consistent with membership but not involved in the organization

South Dakota

- One college is very active
- Hit or miss on attending meetings
- Tribal colleges don't do loans so is an issue at the conferences if those are the only sessions
- Has no outreach plan

Outreach Success: November 2014: 2 staff members from Little Big Horn College attended Fall Training

11-13-14

Feedback from State Presidents through NASFAA's Listserve

Washington

- Washington has two tribal schools
 - one that is official
 - one which started as a tribal college in 1907, but through several iterations has become a private university location on reservation lands.
- Both have been involved in the association on and off throughout the years.
- Currently only one has active members.
- WFAA does not solicit membership based on ethnicity
- I have not visited either school as our travel budget is tight and limited to EC meetings.
- We don't have a separate track for tribal colleges, but always include an ethnic diversity session or two, and our conference charities have frequently been tribal affiliated.
